Alkebulan, mother of humankind. The beginning, the source of everything that came after. This land is different. The soil is fertile. The ancient hills, waters, forests, and sky produce a unique people. The people are diverse. And the world has tried to mimic, suppress, or destroy the rich culture, history, and identity.

What the people produce today and all the generations that follow – they are the source and always will be the seed of human life. In all the many ways intended. Their past roots breathe completely in all societies.

It is sacred. Breathing in is spirit; breathing outward is memory. To speak is to breathe life into something. To create life. Life that connects to everything living. Words that have conscious power from the many. Everything that came after speaks a truth. Listen, Alkebulan speaks. Hear, the growth flows in the veins of humanity.
